Media Reports

- Dignity left by the roadside for a line to an IDP camp

Bannu has taken on about 700,000 people and is bursting at the seams and struggling.

In groups of four to five, they take refuge under a chador as no tents have been set up to provide them shade. This is the first of the misery to encounter on the five long hours driving from Islamabad to Bannu. These are the people who have fled the military operation in North Waziristan and now their life consists mainly of standing in line to register with the government in the merciless heat on the roads of Bannu city.

“This does not need any word—it is insulting simply. This is not the way to assist these displaced people,” commented cricket star Younas Khan, who paid a visit to the city on behalf of the Shahid Khan Afridi Foundation and Umair Sana Foundation.

Khan’s focus was the children for whom he came bearing gifts. One of them was Hazrat Anas, a class eight student from Khisu Khel of North Waziristan, who beamed proudly as he held up his new cricket bat.

80% of displaced people have arrived in Bannu, according to CM Pervaiz Khattak.

As Younas Khan’s vehicle stopped outside a government school, a number of people surrounded it, waving their hands to say hello. An organiser at the foundation told The Express Tribune that whenever they invited a celebrity, people felt comfort and satisfaction to see national heroes come to show solidarity. The arrival of Shahid Afridi, Younas Khan and Shoab Akhtar also brought smiles to their faces, he said.

The temporary distraction is welcome as the process of leaving their homes has been treacherous and fraught with dangers—some of which follow them into the refugee camp.

Many of the families are not on good terms with each other because of tribal rivalries. This recrimination stretches back decades. So now when they find themselves face-to-face, squeezed into line, the hackles rise. Many of them don’t bother to register. “I have disguised myself to hide my identity,” said one 35-year old.

Professor Ghulam Mustafa of Peshawar University said that many people from the Federally Administered Tribal Areas who have been settled for a long time in K-P were also claiming to be displaced people, which was making it doubly difficult for the government to properly register genuinely affected folks.

The whole town is hosting people from North Waziristan, who are now estimated to be around 700,000. Only 37 families of around 1,200 people are living in the camps set up by the government. But media and NGOs are not allowed inside. Non-profits such as the Falah-e-Insaniyat Foundation, Umair Sana Foundation and Al-Khidmat Foundation, have been working in the area.

To add to these tensions, is the mortification of being treated badly. Many of the displaced people said that they were finding it hard to deal with the lack of respect. They have been treated badly while they are standing in line to register or receive rations. It is not easy for a fiercely independent tribesman, respected on his own turf, to take orders from a fresh-faced sipahi from the law-enforcement agencies who are there for crowd control.

The general chaos adds to their exhaustion. For 19-year-old Mohammad Roshan from Miranshah it was overwhelming to try to figure out where he should go to get help. He can hardly be blamed; hospitals are overstretched, doctors and medicines are running short and the threat of epidemics is looming large.

Administrative difficulties

Chief Minister Pervez Khattak told The Express Tribune that the sudden influx of people was to blame for the incoherent aid work. He said that his government has already asked the federal government for meaningful cooperation but to no avail.

Even though the provincial government has given the district administration money, the staff has yet to be paid and as a result they have gone on strike for the last three days.

Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf's Imran Khan criticised what he said was the federal government's refusal to aid the K-P government in the crisis. An estimated 900,000 displaced people have registered in Bannu after fleeing the military operation in North Waziristan Agency.

"We keep hearing the federal government is releasing money for the displaced people but where is it going?" he asked. "It is certainly not being given to the K-P government which is bearing the brunt alone, especially since international aid agencies and NGOs are not being permitted to assist it in its relief efforts."

This has put a strain on the province's resources which were already limited. But despite calls for more coordination between the centre and the province, the federal government's focal person was nowhere to be found on the ground in Bannu.

Imran Khan was also critical of the load-shedding which he said indicated that the federal government didn't care at all. He claimed that the federal government has cut off electricity to 30 villages around Bannu.

The situation has turned K-P into a calamity-hit area but the federal government is refusing to declare the province as such. The pleas of the CM have gone unheard by the centre at a time when K-P is undergoing a severe humanitarian crisis. "Now one hears that the prime minister is off for a week to Saudi Arabia at a time when he should be devoting his resources and time to steering the country out of the crisis by giving visible leadership."

NOC Received by Organizations

06 organizations have received NOC in health sector:

S. No	Organization Name	Sector of Intervention	Area of Intervention	Focal person	Contact
1	IDEA	Health	Bannu	Muhammad Amad	0345 9990101
2	EHSAR Foundation	Health	Bannu	Kazim Ullah	0300 5834200
3	SARHAD	Health	Bannu	Asad Ali	0333 9155098
4	NHSD	Health	Bannu	Dr. Fouzia	0333 6102357
5	HANDS	Health	Bannu	Raheem Mari	0346 9209561
6	YDA	Health	Bannu	Hameed Ullah	0312 9399756

Identified Gaps, Issues and Challenges:

Lack of Coordinated Response: Delay in intimation of the operation has been responsible for the lack of coordinated response from the government and humanitarian relief organization.

Lack of Capacity: Lack of capacity amongst relevant authorities for dealing with the fallout of the operation.

Relief Goods Running Out: Basic relief goods, including clean water, food supplies and medicines are said to be running out fast and the security overhang on IDP response is hampering humanitarian assistance.

Schools as IDPs Camps: There were IDPs living in the 1100 schools within the district, the provincial government had originally announced that the schools would be used as IDP camps, but this was later rejected by the local security authorities. The displaced populations had moved in to these locations, and the concern was that once the schools reopen in August this population would be displaced once more.

Hurdles in Coordinated Relief Assistance: The lack of civilian oversight and access to IDP camp and distribution centers is a serious limitation in ensuring coordinated relief assistance.

Lack of Access and Delay in Issuance of NOCs: Lack of access for journalists and humanitarian relief organisations, particularly in FR Bannu and the delay in issuance of relevant NOCs by security agencies is also one of the existing problems. Proscribed militant organisations under the garb of charitable foundations had started relief work in the area, while other humanitarian NGOs were facing problems in access.

Number of Registered IDPs vs. Estimated Population: One of the reasons that the number of registered IDPs was higher than the estimated population of North Waziristan was due to duplication and errors, with the number expected to decrease by a third once NADRA verification has been completed.

Kurram Registration Centers: IDP families were still entering the country from Kurram agency via Afghanistan and that the Kurram registration centers were likely to remain open even after registration centers in Bannu has stopped registration of new IDPs.
